REFLECTION

Jesus our King challenges our human notions of kingship and authority. Today's gospel shows him standing as a powerless prisoner before Pilate. He is to be judged by the representative of the world's greatest power; in fact, however, the Roman governor is about to judge himself. Pilate tries to escape responsibility by remaining neutral, but the presence of Jesus necessitates a choice. In him Pilate encounters truth-and refuses to listen. Although Christ rules over the realm of the spirit, his spiritual kingdom decisively affects this world and calls for decision. In the vision described by Daniel, a son of man (a member of the human race) receives from God the function of judge of humankind. Jesus, who rejected power as a way to gain followers and submitted to unjust power as a way to gain followers and submitted to unjust power, now receives the glory of universal rule. But what a ruler! The book of Revelation focuses on our pierced King, who shared our humanity and cleansed us of sin by his death in order to make us kings and priests with him.

Will we follow him?
